Dear Students, Faculty and Staff,

The School of Public Health proposed to the Provost new tuition rates for graduate students, to begin in 2017. The UW Regents will make the final decision on these rates early this summer.

Pending approval by the Regents, currently enrolled resident MPH students will see an 8% tuition increase in fall 2017. Tuition for newly entering resident MPH students will also increase 8% in fall 2017.

These new tuition rates are competitively priced with our peer schools. Compared to other state Schools of Public Health, we currently remain moderately priced, with residential tuition substantially below UC-Berkeley, UCLA, and Michigan. Our tuition is significantly less than the cost of private schools of public health such as Columbia, Emory, and Harvard.

Attached is a revised chart of the tuition changes. (The tuitions shown are annual, based on three quarters of study.)

We welcome your questions. Please direct them to sphtuitq@uw.edu, and we will address them.
