Who Knew??

Denis Brasfield (OD) hits the tennis courts at 6 am several times a week. A former high school player, he picked up the game again about 15 years ago. "The thing I enjoy most about competitive tennis is that it requires a combination of both the physical (agility, strength, endurance) and the mental (tactics, patience, problem-solving)," Denis says.

The trio were among 16 student scholars honored by The Office of Minority Affairs and Diversity and the Friends of the Educational Opportunity Program. Catch a short video of the EOP Scholars.

Making a Difference

One group went dumpster diving. Another took on the subsidized corn industry. A third explored fair trade and organic food labels. The 70 students in "Food Studies: Harvest to Health," taught by Jennifer Otten (HServ) and TA Sara Diedrich (grad student, Public Health Nutrition) were assigned to produce short videos about a food topic raised in class. The aim? To craft a message for peers about how food is produced and its impact on our health and the environment. "We're living in a visual world," Otten said. "We all have 10 minutes to get our point across." Thirteen videos were made on topics such as food waste, fair-trade chocolates and organic coffee. Watch a few of them.
