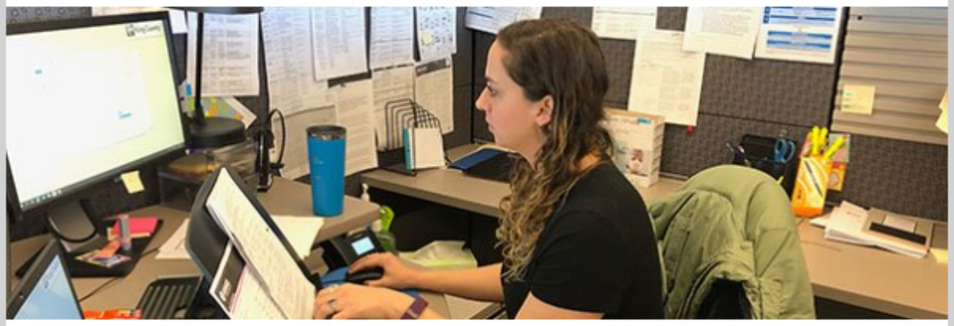
What to expect:

- Launching Your Research Portfolio
- Microaggressions within the Classroom Resources
- Faculty Development Upcoming Events
- Faculty Spotlight: Kenneth Mugwanya



Launching Your Research Portfolio: Panel Discussion

Navigating an academic institution can be challenging for faculty members, especially for newly-minted assistant professors. There is an orientation, but often there is too much information given in a short period of time. One aspect of information that is touched upon but doesn't get enough attention is how to launch your research portfolio. In April, several seasoned and talented professors came together in a panel discussion and disseminated their thoughts.

READ THE FULL STORY

Microaggressions within the classroom: resources

In conjunction with April's upcoming FDP meeting, here are some resources addressing microaggressions within the classroom.

- What are microaggressions
- Handling microaggressions in the classroom

A quick look at upcoming events in May

- Next FDP meeting: April 18 @ HRC 250 at 12-1 p.m.
- Helping Students Access Counseling and Mental Health Resources: April 13, on Zoom, 10-11 a.m.

Kenneth Mugwanya

Kenneth Mugwanya has been fighting the HIV epidemic since he was a physician in Uganda, to a doctoral student at the UW, to an assistant professor at the School of Public Health. Here's what he's learned about research, communities, and asking good questions.

READ THE FULL STORY

© 2023 University of Washington School of Public Health
3980 15th Ave NE, Seattle, WA 98105

This email was sent to
Unsubscribe or change your email preferences